

My problem with the mandated prevention of copyright protection is that it completely prevents me from being able to timeshift a program to watch later as I've been able to do currently for last 15 years.

Technically, my question is that if this is being done to prevent priacy, how would it really prevent. The people who engage in it in a major way, will still be able to easily defeat this. Anything that is defined, where the decryption is based on public information, will always be easy to defeat.

Therefore, the real effect of this ruling will be to prevent home users from being able to record and use broadcasts as we currently do, without doing anything that will actually prevent real priacy from occurring.
